

Call for Submissions to the Behavior Analyst

The new editorial staff of The Behavior Analyst would like to invite the submission of manuscripts of high quality that are within the broad scope of the journal's domain.

The following Statement of Editorial Policy is reprinted from Volume 1, Number 1.

1. The Behavior Analyst should contribute to the effective governance and functioning of ABA. It should identify and discuss trends, issues and policies and generally should be an instrument to encourage participation in the affairs of ABA.
2. The Behavior Analyst should examine the relations of behavior analysis to psychology and to society as a whole. Various cultural, philosophic and scientific influences on the development and practice of behavior analysis merit examination and discussion.
3. The Behavior Analyst should survey and assess areas of substantive knowledge and fields of application within behavior analysis in a form and style suitable for the general membership. Manuscripts suitable for specialized colleagues belong elsewhere.
4. In general, The Behavior Analyst strives not to compete directly with other existing journals which substantially contribute to the literature of behavior analysis. Therefore, manuscripts reporting specific empirical studies, experimental or applied, should be sent elsewhere, as should those bearing directly on behaviorism as a philosophy. However, reviews of the literature, theoretical expositions and articles on professional issues and current issues in behavior analysis, are welcome, as are book and media reviews, position announcements and news and notes.
5. The editor of The Behavior Analyst may from time to time offer brief editorial comment and description of problems and issues facing behavior analysis and also may request others to offer such comment.

Manuscripts must be typed double spaced using APA style and submitted with the original and five copies. Figures must be in the form of camera ready art copy or glossy prints. Submissions and correspondence should be addressed to:

Julie S. Vargas
608 Allen Hall
West Virginia University
Morgantown, W.V. 26506
Phone: 304/293-3879

Issues are planned for Winter and Fall, 1980.
